VOL. 14, NUMBER 58 MONESSEN, PA, FRIDAY, AUGUST 20, 1915 SIX CENTS THE WEEK

Men who can be honest with the people are the ones to aspire to office. Those who join political combinations to play into selfish hands, better stay at home.

Many Offenders Arrested In Raid By County Officials

Crusades were simultaneously started on Tuesday afternoon against many alleged liquor joints in various parts of the county and continued until yesterday, resulting in a number of prisoners being placed in the county jail, while others are out on heavy bail. Monessen, Export and Bolivar were three of the places spotted for investigation by the officers of the law who are working on the jobs.

At Export a big haul was made late Tuesday evening by Constable Cashdollar, assisted by a member of the state police. In all of the three towns, with the exception of Bolivar, the persons charged with the crime of selling liquor illegally are foreigners.

Nine men were gathered into the lockup at Export and they were being held in the borough lockup at the request of the arrested men that they could be given an opportunity to get bail. It is said that Constable Cashdollar has strong evidence in each case. The arrests were made under instructions from District Attorney C. Ward Eicher, and a good deal of the evidence, it is said, was unearthed by County Detective A. C. Remaley. Should the foreigners be unable to get bail they will be brought to the county jail this afternoon. The informations were made against the men before Squire John G. Foight.

Detective Paul Feightner and Constable Walton were here Wednesday, but got only four foreigners charged with selilng liquor illegally. They all gave bail for a hearing before Squire Truxal on Tuesday of next week. Three or four of those suspicioned of selling liquor in this city eluded arrest, but will likely be located later.

Charges of illegal liquor selling that created commotion in the little town of Bolivar reached District Attorney Eicher Tuesday afternoon. The system employed by the prosecutor in the case came as a surprise to the officials. J. A. Humphries, a butcher of Bolivar, claimed to have evidence implicating a number of citizens of that town in the sale of liquor. Among those who were suspicioned of dealing in intoxicating drinks were former Constable McCune and his two sons. Another was a clerk in one of the town's drug stores and other persons of some prominence. Altogether there were six persons charged with the crime.

Missing Girl Was Located

Anna Mayirnik, the 16 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Mayirnik of 248 Rostraver street, who mysteriously disappeared from her home Monday, August 9 has been located at the home of an aunt in Canada. A letter to this effect was received by the girl's mother this week but they do not know in what part of Canada the aunt resides and can not tell by the postmark on the letter.

The Mayirnik girl left home August 9th, telling her mother she was going to look for work. When she did not return the same evening a search was instituted, but no trace of the girl found. Before leaving she took $125 from the house and little hopes were entertained of hearing from her again. The father is angered at the actions of his daughter and stated that he will have her placed in some home for stealing the money, the savings of many years.

The Dog Question

Serious trouble it is believed will be encountered when an attempt is made to enforce the law relative to dogs owned or found in possession of foreign born residents of Pennsylvania who have not been fully naturalized. The district attorney's office is being besieged with requests for an explanatory statement regarding the law, and its probable effect when the same foreign-born and not fully naturalized resident is enabled to exhibit on the collar of his dog a license tag indicating that a tax has been paid upon the dog. While the new law authorizing constables to arrest residents of the kind indicated who have in their possession a dog or dogs, and then dispatch said canines may not be unconstitutional, it seems clear to the authorities in the district attorney's office that the new law is certainly inconsistent, and that there is a possibility that it will not stand a test.

The old dog law in effect is that every resident owning or having in his possession a dog must pay to the county wherein he resides the sum of one dollar for each male and two dollars for each female dog. When that tax is paid the owner of the dog is given a tax which the owner is expected to fasten to a collar on the neck of the animal, that its safety may be secure from any constable moving about and looking for dogs upon whom no license has been paid.

That the two laws seriously conflict seems certain to the district attorney. Justices of the peace and constables who are watching for the "foreign-born resident who has not been fully naturalized," and having in his possession a dog, will be advised to go slow in the matter.

The new act of assembly did not repeal the former dog law.

No Pension Money

Abandoned mothers may no longer receive pensions.

Officials of the Auditor General's department at Harrisburg on Tuesday announced that Attorney General Brown had informed them that under the amendment to the mothers' pension law passed at the recent session of the legislature, pensions could be allowed only to widows and to women whose husbands were permanently confined in an insane asylum.

As a result in Westmoreland county, a number of women who received pensions under the old regime, will have to be taken from the list. Four women will be affected now, and a number of other abandoned mothers were previously taken from the list.

Mill Men Won Final Ball Game

In the third and last game of the season, the mill men triumphed over the carpenters and painters of the Motz Lumber company last evening in a shameful manner, defeating them in a 14 to 10 count. For nine long and drearisome innings, the carpenters and painters struggled hopelessly on their way, hoping against hope . Their playing nevertheless was of the thoroughbred top notch stuff.

Clark Derby, who was suffering from excess of strength and cunningness, pitched sensational ball and was backed in sensational manner by his team mates. The big pitcher worked himself in superior manner as if his very life depended on the result of the game.

Thanks are also due to Charley Elsey. In the ninth chapter, his herculean figure of an athlete who was destined to blast the hope of Mr. Carnes and his followers. Never let it be said that Elsey, the deamon slugger, had been false to his trust. Nor would he fail in this crisis. Gritting his teeth and seizing his trusty club of war with a firm grasp, he wished he had a mustache that he might gnaw at. The mustache being conspicuous by its absence, the mighty one from the paint shop smote the Carnesonian severely, the ball riccocheting to left field and the noble athlete lodging on second base and sending two men over the home pan before the maltreated pellet could be propelled back into the inner works. But that was all, sad to say.

Nary a man succeeded after that to reach first base. Even the heavens tried to weep, but their offering was not copious enough to interfere with the proceedings. It was rumored that some of the fans on the bench wept too, when they considered that the last chance was gone, but this rumor wasn't substantiated.

Not to be outdone by Esley, a clean cut, lithe, alert and earnest young driver, J. R. Mooney by name, fired a shot in defense of his home team, the effort coming when the seventh attack was made on the horde of bears —horde or whatever you might call them.

But at the best of all the above, the carpenters and painters were outplayed, the mill men proving a trifle better on to the playing. This marks the close of the season. with the glad flag of honors going to the mill men.

Former Local Residents Were Rescued From Flood

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Price and family, formerly of this city, but now located in Galveston, Texas, will be glad to learn that they were rescued from the storm stricken city on Tuesday. A telegram from Mrs. Price to her mother, Mrs. Louisa Jones of Maple avenue, was received yesterday stating that despite the fact that their home was destroyed by the flood, the members of the family escaped without any serious injury.

Mr. Price will be remembered as a former official at the local plant of the Pittsburgh Steel. Sometime ago he was sent to Galveston, Texas, to take charge of the large warehouse of the company at that city and later removed his family and household goods there.

The great flood that swept over Galveston and other towns along the south and east Texas coast damaged property to the amount of $30,000,000 and caused 100 deaths. The heaviest loss was at Virginia Point, opposite Galveston, where 30 people were reported dead. In Galveston the damage to property will amount to about $15,000,000 with 14 deaths reported. A thousand feet of seawall about the northern side of the town has been torn away and the causeway which connects Galveston with the outside world has been cut into at the bridge. Many fires done great damage in the city which is now without adequate water supply.

McGrew Reunion

The fourth annual meeting of the McGrew Reunion Association with headquarters at McKeesport, will be held at Olympia park, August 26th. The usual large attendance is anticipated. Among the guests will be members from Missouri, Iowa and Indiana, and other middle western states. Representatives with greetings from associations in Indiana and Ohio will also be in attendance.

In the afternoon a round table meeting will be held, at which reports will be read and brief addresses made. Among the speakers expected this year was Governor Arthur Capper of Kansas, but it was found that his engagement to represent his state at the Panama Exposition would prevent his coming. The meeting will be in the nature of a family group basket picnic.

"Momento Mori"

The early Christian philosophers frequently used the Latin phrase "Memento mori," meaning by that to warn sinners of the approach of death. The world moves on; Latin becomes a dead language; ragtime dominates our amusements and physicians of the body tell us to forget the admonitions of former spiritual advisers and "Remember life." "What is death," they ask, except the end of things in which everyone else is more concerned than ourselves,even though we are the principal actor therein? Dr. Woods Hutchinson, president elect of the American Academy of Medicine, says that overeating is the chief trouble of the American people. He warns us to remember the correct way to live is to be temperate in all things, especially in eating, driving home the fact that "it doesn't matter in the least how fast we dig our own graves, so long as we do not fall into them too previously." All of which brings us to the fact, physicians are continually showing, that the American people die before their time because they are intemperate—not in drinking, as the prohibitionists would have us believe, but in overworking and overeating and overliving. The sight of a drunken man, even in the great cities, is comparatively rare. Few saloons, nowadays, will sell a drunken man. But, go into a restaurant and watch people overeat. Note the fat paunches, the hanging jowls, the dead eyes, the gouty walks of those you pass, and you will not be astonished at the physician's statements. Temperance is moderate indulgence. It is just as bad morally and physically to overeat as it is to overdrink. In our fight for temperance in drinking, we must not overlook that other greater evil—overeating. Remember life!

many of our patrons cannot understand

why fur prices are so low

LAYMAN and experts agree that it will be years before fur prices will be as low as as they are at present. One can buy fine high grade dependable furs for the prices formerly paid for the cheaper furs.

For this reason the better grade of furs will be universally worn the coming season.

These low prices cannot last though—only good as long as the present supply that was purchased at such low prices lasts.

Almost everybody in America that manufactures their own furs like we do bought a large supply of raw skins and the surplus was soon absorbed.

Fur prices are down to an unprecedented low point because of the world's war—the countries at war were not customers this Spring, and the product of a year was suddenly thrown upon the American market, and prices dropped to the lowest in the history of the trade.

What effect these low prices have had upon our business is expressed in the fact that during the first twelve days of August we sold more furs than we have during any August fur sale in the history of our business.

Here you can select your own skins — choose your own models, and from time to time see your coat or fur set in work, as all the better grade of our furs are made right on the premises.

here's fur fashion news:

FOX in white, blue, silver, cross, red and battleship gray, is now in vogue—double furs—lifelike animal scarfs—are best. So great in favor has this shape in Fox become that other fur is being made in imitation of this style—but Fox is Fox, and nothing imitated is like it.

Fox has a distinctiveness that nothing can replace—its fur is long, soft and silky—its paws, head and its tail—all combine to distinguish it as the fur of furs

FOX being in such high favor it is only a question of a short time until the present supply, bought at war prices, will be exhausted, and, as you must have Fox to be in style, if you do not place your order now, you will undoubtedly have to pay considerable more.

You can make your selection now and your furs will be held in our cold storage vaults until you want them, and arrangements can be made so that you will not receive your bill until November 1st.

SYNOPSIS.

Kitty Gray, newspaper woman, finds in a curio shop half of a broken coin, the mutilated inscription on which arouses her curiosity and leads her, at the order of her managing editor, to go to the principality of Gretznoffen to piece out the story suggested by the inscription. She is followed, and on arrival in Gretzhoffen her adventures while chasing the secret of the broken coin begin.

SEVENTH INSTALLMENT

CHAPTER XXV.

Divided.

As Kitty approached the little room of the count's palace—which before now had proved to be something of a storm center in the affairs of the Gretzhoffen coin—there came to her the conviction that there might be others beside herself who would have some inkling as to the whereabouts of the missing portion of the coin and who might therefore arrive upon the scene at much the same time as that of her own visit. She was not altogether surprised at the sudden interruption of her labors, just at the moment of her success.

As she saw herself the object of a poised weapon, she swerved aside instinctively—called out instinctively for help.

"Roleau!" she exclaimed, for, womanlike, she had learned the value of a strong man's arm, and her first thought was of the faithful servant who so strangely had attached himself to her own varying fortunes. And Roleau came hastening from his watching place outside the door.

He saw the little room occupied by a man—who now suddenly had entered—and who menaced Kitty, so that, to save her life as she supposed, she was on the point of surrendering to him both pieces of the coin. The sight of his mistress in danger was enough for Roleau. With his customary battle cry he plunged immediately into the conflict, careless of the threatening weapon. In the melee the two half coins both were dropped upon the floor.

Even now the ruling impulse of Kitty did not quite forsake her. She stooped and regained one of the half coins, but the struggling men, shifting here and there in the room, kept her from securing the other. In the blind instinct for escape she fled now to the open hall, taking that direction which led back from the front of the building.

Roleau heard her pass, and could not join her in flight—but he heard her give a cry of alarm whose cause he could only guess. His energies were fully occupied by the combat with this stranger—whom now he saw to be one of Count Sachio's men. He had noted him at the hunting lodge. He himself had not time to reason as to the presence of this new factor in the general imbroglio, but at last, able to bring his own weapons into play, he stayed the issue for a time. They both had time to recognize one another as they stood, the one as much baffled as the other, and neither quite comprehending what the other was doing here.

She Felt a Hard Hand Close Upon Her Mouth.

Very naturally the sounds of all this confusion could not be concealed. The scream of a woman had rung widely through the halls, and used as they were to extraordinary circumstances hereabouts, the servants could not fail to investigate the cause of this. They hastened in the direction of the uproar, but their advance was stayed by the command of the master of the palace himself.

The men in the room, as they paused for breathing space, heard a steady footfall advancing to the door, heard the calm voice of Count Frederick himself.

"Gentlemen!"

The intruders, whatever the errand of each, took their eyes from one another and turned now, recognizing yet another man who scarce had come in friendship.

"You honor me greatly, gentlemen," said Count Frederick with his usual coolness in any extraordinary situation. "But might I ask why you care thus to disarrange my apartment? Had I known your own curiosity regarding it, I might have asked some of my servants to assist you in a search more orderly."

"I was sent back by my master," began the stranger—who was none other than Bartel, the late successor to Rudolph in Count Sachio's good graces. "He had left certain of his belongings—some silver cases of the toilet, Monsieur le Comte—he did not trouble to ask you about them, and now he sent me—"

"Indeed! That is most plausible! But why seek for them in my rooms, when his quarters were in quite another part of the palace, my dear sir?"

"As to that," replied the other with calm effrontery, "I cannot say. I only came here because the servants told me that this was the room. Of course, if there has been any mistake—"

"Cease, I say," exclaimed Count Frederick, frowning now, his face flushing.

He turned from Roleau to the other intruder in his apartments. Roleau stood dumb. The other shook his head.

"Monsieur le Comte," said he, "the young woman was here when I entered—when this man also entered. She passed yonder—when she had the opportunity—and took with her one half the coin. There lies the other on your floor. She disappeared—we heard a cry—"

Count Frederick stooped and picked up the object pointed out to him. It was his own half of the coin—or that which he had called his own—since he had taken it from her.

So then, he reflected, she had found the way to his most secret hiding place—she was on the very point of success when this last contretempa had interfered with her plans. A new feeling of admiration for her keenness and persistence once more came to Count Frederick's heart. For a moment he stood regarding half-regretfully the bit of metal in his hand.

"I shall not offer this trinket to you, my friend," said he grimly to the man Bartel, as he pocketed the coin, "for of course you were not looking for coins—only toilet articles—silver ones, did you say, sir? You shall take back an excellent set of my own to Count Sachio, with my compliments. Tell him that it would seem ill to me that any guest of mine should suffer risk of loss either to his person or his property while he was beneath my roof!"

With these stinging words, which brought color to the other's face, Count Frederick turned coolly away, and once more faced Roleau. That was in his face now which did not bespeak remorselessness, revengefulness. No, something softer lay in the man's cool gray eyes.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Solitary Confinement.

When Kitty in her blind impulse of self-preservation sprang out of Count Frederick's room, she did not at first contemplate continued flight. Once out of reach of immediate danger, she paused, loath to leave what she had come there to obtain, and loath also to abandon her stout hearted ally in his time of stress. She turned back, paused just outside the door once more. As she did so, yet another door opening into the hall was pushed silently ajar—opened fully. Yet another man, whom never in her life had she seen before, now stepped out. She felt a hard hand close upon her mouth, more than half stifling her scream for help. "Silence!" she heard his voice insist. "Go on ahead of me."

Once more Kitty undertook to scream, and again the firm hand stopped her voice. It seemed to her that some pungent aromatic drug filled the car with its fumes. She struggled less violently. Events seemed to pass by her in a dream and she regarded them carelessly, apathetically. In short, either in part or in whole, she had lost consciousness.

When at length she fully regained her senses she was alone—alone with a terror which seemed to her more overpowering than any she yet had known. Instead of her own apartments in her hotel, instead of the room of Count Frederick or the hunting lodge of his quondam friend, Count Sachio, she found herself surrounded by four barren walls—in what edifice or in what place she could not guess. There seemed some sort of door—yes. There was a small, high, barred window, but the latter was at such height as to be almost beyond her reach. For the time Kitty was of the belief that her senses must leave her forever. The sense of solitude was a poignant torture.

How long she had thus remained she could not tell, when at length the close-fitting door in one side of the four walls opened. An old woman came in, bringing some food for her. Kitty tried her in every language which she had ever known, but got no answer. The old woman shook her head, and after a time retreated silently as she had come.

Getting no answer to her appeal for help, Kitty sat down once more, fighting herself to retain her faculties, her calm, her poise. Escape? How could there be hope for that? For once she was at her wit's end as she looked about her. She sat moody and silent, too dazed, suffering too much, too uncertain in her own mind to plan intelligently any course of action. She was brought to herself somewhat by hearing the tinkle of some object on the floor at her feet.

It was a bit of stone wrapped tightly in a little wad of paper. Surely it had been meant as some communication to her—from someone outside the room. It must have come through the window.

She opened the paper and smoothed it out. As she read it she wondered how many other persons there were in this strange country who could claim acquaintance with her own plans.

"Better write an imaginary story for your paper and return to America. Give up the coins and you will gain your freedom. Refuse and you will fare badly."

Olympic Theatre

"Scandal" on Thursday, the first Universal Broadway feature was great, was to our lives a wonderful lesson, was as good and in some ways better than the wonderful production of Pathe "Who Pays?" and similar to them. Yet we had not in our theatre one fifth of the amount of patrons we should have had. Yet if we had one of those loud speakers barking at noon because she does not come down to tell us about Chinese habits, or how the cannibal Africans are hunting equally wild animals as they are, or if we had some old carnival or circus, the streets of Monessen would be crowded.

But when we do have something great—something worth while to travel many miles to see, to get a lesson, you stay away. It is a bad habit. It is not the money question. We know it. We do not bring these great productions here to look upon them ourselves alone. Use the brains God gave you as well as your eyes. 1t
